

Providing Access to Help (PATH)

PATH serves at-risk, school-aged youth who are experiencing behavioral challenges, school disruptions, Baker Acts, law enforcement contacts, or family conflicts and are referred through the Youth-at-Risk (YAR) Interagency Staffing process. The goal of PATH is to prevent out-of-home placements or more intensive care by providing additional supports to youth and families.

PATH provides service navigation, direct linkages, and family supports to ensure youth are connected to community resources, stabilized, and able to remain safely in their home, school, and community. Using a hands-on, family-centered approach, PATH integrates wraparound principles — strength-based, family-driven, and individualized — with YAR processes to:

- Increase family participation
- Implement YAR service recommendations
- Link youth and families to services via warm hand-offs, with support every step of the way

PATH aims to de-escalate crises, reduce the need for out-of-home placement, stabilize families, and improve youth life outcomes.
